La Siberia, a Pinot Noir gem by Juvé & Camps

This unique cava originates in an exceptional parcel with a different microclimate than the rest of the Espiells vineyard.

Sant Sadurní d'Anoia, October 2018 — Juvé & Camps presents La Siberia, a new Gran Reserva cava made exclusively from Pinot Noir. La Siberia originates in the Espiells vineyard, specifically in an exceptional parcel flanked by forest and a stream, in the coldest reaches of the eponymous estate, which is what inspired the cava's name. The area has a special microclimate, different from the rest of the vineyard, due to its location. During the winter, it is much colder, whereas in the summer the area enjoys a cool air current thanks to the stream, which keeps temperatures relatively mild.

The vineyard's Pinot Noir plantings date from 1984. The international varieties Chardonnay and Pinot Noir were introduced to the Penedès wine region in the 1980s. However, most plantings did not last long, because production was low and the varieties had a distinctly different profile from what was known in the region.

Juvé & Camps maintained a small five-hectare parcel, the source of the Pinot Noir that now brings us La Siberia. Planted in 1984, the vines grow in shallow soils over a bedrock of lutites (clay composed of calcium carbonate and magnesium). In this case, the vine roots have to penetrate the cracks in the bedrock to absorb nutrients and water. As they get older, the vines adapt better to this type of soil and their roots penetrate deeper. During periods of drought, they also prove more resistant, making it clear that this limited-production gem originates in an extraordinary enclave on the Juvé & Camps estate.

La Siberia has a lovely pale pink hue with salmon nuances, which reflect its long ageing, more than 80 months to be precise. The constant effervescence fills the glass with chains of tiny beads that form a lasting ring on reaching the surface. The aroma is deep, complex and very elegant. Intense red fruit notes of cherry and redcurrant combine with aromas of lees ageing like brioche and butter. As La Siberia opens up, it offers subtle nutty undertones.

In the mouth, La Siberia displays magnificent structure, framed by lovely effervescence that caresses and envelops the palate in pleasant sensations. Surprisingly creamy and fresh given its long ageing, which reveals the magnificence of this cava. Remarkably persistent, with echoes of dried apricot, cherry, nuts, fine puff pastry and an underlying minerality.
